Blessed are we, if in poverty of spirit we free ourselves from false confidence in material things, desiring above all else spiritual and religious goods, treating the poor with respect and love, as our brothers and living images of Christ. Blessed are we, if in the meek of the strong we renounce the ruinous power of hate and vengeance, conquering only by goodness and peace.

Blessed are we, if we refuse to direct our lives by self-interest, nor take pleasure as our goal, but learn to find in temperance strength, in pain a source of redemption, in sacrifice the summit of greatness.

Blessed are we, if we prefer to be oppressed rather than among the oppressors, always hungering for justice to be increased.

Blessed are we, if for the Kingdom of God -in our time and in eternity- we learn to struggle and to pardon, to serve and to act, to suffer and to love.

Pope Paul V1-1964
